LIMITED PRODUCT WARRANTY

General: All products sold by Ballistic Glass & Armor Solutions, LLC ("BGAS") come with a 2-year limited warranty against defects in materials and workmanship.

Notice/Disclaimer: No material is "bullet-proof." With enough repetition and fire-power, every material will eventually break. The products sold by BGAS are designed to provide varying degrees of protection against the impact of ballistic rounds. Our unique systems provide different levels of resistance which are rated for each product. Our products use proprietary systems that involve glass, polycarbonates, adhesive interlayers, and bullet-resistant engineered techniques to absorb energy from ballistic rounds. Our products are independently tested against the ballistic penetration limits included in the United States Underwriters Laboratory (UL) standard commonly known as UL752. The UL752 standard establishes 10 levels of resistance to ballistic threats, from a 9 mm handgun (level 1) to a military grade .50 caliber rifle (Level 10). As an example, a Level 3 product measured by the UL752 standard would withstand 3 direct shots from a .44 magnum handgun. For additional information, ask to see the UL752 standards for testing.

BGAS is not and does not claim to be a UL Certified Manufacturer. We do not certify to the actual full UL program because UL certification requires all products to be "no-spall" products even though most applications do not require no-spall. In fact, most applications are not well suited to no-spall products. However, BGAS does test to the ballistic guidelines set forth in the UL 752 in respect to velocity, grain weight, bullet type, and caliber.

For an explanation of the differences between no-spall vs low-spall, please refer to the white-paper "Understanding Ballistic Certifications" posted on the resources tab of the BGAS website. BGAS chooses not to certify under UL simply because no-spall products are the wrong choice for the vast majority of customer applications we provide. No-spall products have special cleaning and maintenance requirements. If not properly cared for, no-spall products can have a shorter effective service life. In addition, no-spall products are typically more expensive. For these reasons, no-spall products are not the best choice unless there is a specific requirement driving the need for no-spall. However, certain applications do require no-spall and we are happy to provide those products and certification when appropriate.
